Gorillas in the mist! Zoo trail gives apes a view

Ape fun. The zoo hopes the trails will help keep the animals alert.

When it comes to gorillas, girls are more adventurous.

That's the case at the Philadelphia Zoo at least, where two female gorillas have surprised their handlers with their enthusiasm for an elevated trail that gives them towering views of the patrons who are supposed to be looking at them.

"Gorillas are really interested in people," said Kristen Farley-Rambo, the primary gorilla keeper at the zoo.

The zoo last month opened its Gorilla Treeway, a 300-foot-long enclosed trail that passes from their enclosure and into a bank of trees.

When a gorilla used it, it was a scene that stopped crowds in their tracks on Tuesday, despite the rain. That's if the animal uses it.

The boys — men, really, when you are talking about silverback western lowland gorillas — have been a little more shy about the trail.

"We always knew with apes that personality would play a big role," said Kevin Murphy, the chief curator at the zoo.

A particularly rambunctious male, Kuchimba, hasn't taken full advantage of the opportunity to explore.

"That particular personality surprised us," Murphy said.

American Airlines. Bomb threat shuts down Philadelphia flight

A bomb threat on a Philadelphia-bound plane was one of five called in to the Transportation Security Administration on Tuesday, police said.

American Airlines Flight 648 from San Diego to Philadelphia was diverted to a remote part of the airport, evacuated and searched Tuesday morning, said Chief Inspector Joseph Sullivan.

Sullivan said the bomb threats were not considered credible, because the sheer number of them would seem to indicate an incredibly high degree of coordination.

The plane was thoroughly searched, however, out of an abundance of caution.

NBC News reports that the four other flights were a Korean Air flight from Seoul to San Francisco, a Delta flight from Los Angeles to Atlanta, a United flight from San Francisco to Chicago and a Volare flight from Portland, Ore., to Guadalajara, Mexico.

Police used explosives-detecting dogs to search the plane and luggage.

The airline said that the passengers were accommodated with customer service. DAN KELLEY

Crime

Police-involved shooting under investigation

A police-involved shooting will be investigated after two officers in South Philly shot at a man carrying a loaded Glock and missed, authorities said Tuesday.

The two officers fired at Andre Evans, 29, after he turned his gun toward them, the police said. They did not hit the man, who threw himself to the ground when bullets flew, dropping his gun in the process.

Evans was charged with aggravated assault, firearm violations and fleeing police. Police said the officers tried to pull him over Saturday about 7:30 p.m. on South 18th Street, but Evans took off before he hit a parked car and part of a building on Wharton Street. He jumped out of the car and fled with the loaded .40-caliber Glock. METRO

Bullet missed baby

Stray bullets from gunfire hit baby's crib in Edgemoor Gardens

Stray bullets hit a baby's crib in the Edgemoor Gardens neighborhood Monday night, police said.

One man was wounded in the shooting, but the baby, who was sleeping in the portable crib, was not injured.

Police said the man who was shot was in his 20s, but they did not release his identity.

He was taken to Christiana Hospital, where he was listed in stable condition.

Two gunmen were seen fleeing the scene. Police have been unable to locate them.

Anyone with information is urged to call New Castle County Police at 302-573-2800.

'Afghan Girl' print among items stolen from local photographer

A print of the famous piercing stare of an Afghani girl caught by local photographer Steve McCurry and made famous on the cover of National Geographic was allegedly stolen and sold by McCurry's former employee, who now faces criminal charges, prosecutors announced.

Bree DeStephano, 32, of York, Pa., was charged Tuesday with theft and related offenses for allegedly stealing and selling prints, books and other items from McCurry worth a total of more than $650,000, the Chester County DA's office announced.

McCurry is a renowned photographer who travels to remote areas of the world to take photographs.

One of the prints stolen is McCurry's most notable work, "Afghan Girl," which appeared on the cover of National Geographic in June 1985.

"In order to take photographs like the Afghan Girl, Steve McCurry was exposed to extraordinary risks, tremendous costs, and spent years of his career," DA Tom Hogan said in a statement. "The defendant casually abused her position of trust to make some easy money, without a thought to the damage to Mr. McCurry."

Prosecutors say between May 2012 until November 2013, DeStephano, who worked as manager of Fine Art Print Sales at McCurry's Chester County-based business, Steve McCurry Studios, stole 50 prints worth $628,000 and resold them.

DeStephano allegedly resold some of the prints through a gallery in Colorado with Brandon Donahue, manager of Open Shutter Gallery in Durango, Colo.

Donahue will also face criminal charges, prosecutors say.

Top four reasons why Sepp Blatter resigned from FIFA

Analysis. Metro breaks down what likely caused the shock resignation.

Sepp Blatter's resignation Tuesday as the head of FIFA was stunning — especially for the fact that it came just four days after he was re-elected to a fifth term. The 79-year-old FIFA president, who had run for re-election on Friday despite the corruption scandal sweeping world soccer, revealed his resignation in Zurich, and said a new, special election would be held soon. Metro compiled the most likely reasons behind Blatter's resignation from the international soccer governing body.

JOHN A. OSWALD

BLATTER

1 The $10 million 'bribe'

The New York Times revealed Monday that the scandal had moved a step closer to Blatter when it identified his right-hand man, Secretary General Jerome Valcke, as the person accused of authorizing a $10 million bribe that lies at the heart of U.S. Attorney General Loretta Lynch's entire case. Blatter was yet to be named in the Justice Department's 47-page indictment, but several news agencies are now reporting that prosecutors are honing in on him.

FIFA, for its part, blamed on a dead man the $10 million payment, which prosecutors allege was made to FIFA by South Africa in order to buy the 2010 World Cup. It said the late chairman of FIFA's Finance Committee, Julio Grondona, who died last year, had authorized the $10 million payment.

2 The Loretta Lynch rant

"There is something that smells," a defiant Blatter said in his post-election victory lap on Friday as he took a swipe at Attorney General Loretta Lynch, who oversaw the investigation when she oversaw the Eastern District in Brooklyn.

Blatter said, "Listen, with all the respect to the judicial system of the U.S. with a new minister of justice. The Americans, if they have a financial crime that regards American citizens then they must arrest these people there and not in Zurich when we have a congress."

3 UEFA threat

The European soccer association, except for Russia and Spain, wanted Blatter gone — and has gone to great lengths to say so. UEFA President Michel Platini, who is now the No. 1 favorite to replace Blatter, had threatened to walk away.

4 Visa and other advertisers for world soccer

Visa, one of the world's largest companies, was leading the corporate boardroom demand for change in FIFA, including a call last week for Blatter's ouster. Other companies were also rumbling.

McDonald's. Adidas. Hyundai. Coca-Cola.

All made it clear that sponsorship of the World Cup could suffer if corruption charges were not properly dealt with.

All a-Twitter. FIFA president Sepp Blatter, 79, announced his resignation, and the Internet had a lot to say about it.

Sepp Blatter, the president of FIFA, announced his resignation Tuesday afternoon amid the corruption scandal rocking the world of soccer.

Blatter, 79, released a statement saying: "I have been reflecting deeply about my presidency and about the forty years in which my life has been inextricably bound to FIFA and the great sport of football. I cherish FIFA more than anything and I want to do only what is best for FIFA and for football. I felt compelled to stand for re-election, as I believed that this was the best thing for the organisation. That election is over but FIFA's challenges are not."

Blatter went on to say that FIFA was in need of a "profound overhaul" and that he did not have the "mandate from the en-

Prosecutors seek 21-month sentence for White House fence jumper

Federal prosecutors are seeking a 21-month prison sentence for the Army veteran from Texas who entered the White House with a knife before being tackled last year, according to court documents.

Prosecutors made the proposal in a sentencing memo for Omar Gonzalez filed in U.S. District Court. The recommendation is at the top of sentencing guidelines because Gonzalez "needlessly endangered" White House occupants and Secret Service officers, the memo said.

Sentencing was scheduled for June 8 but Judge Rosemary Collyer agreed to a request from Gonzalez's attorney for the hearing to be rescheduled to June 15.

On Sept. 19, Gonzalez, from Copperas Cove, Texas, climbed over the White House fence, ran across the lawn, and pushed past a Secret Service agent guarding an entrance and went into the executive mansion.

When he was arrested, he was found to be carrying a folding knife. He told a Secret Service agent that he needed to tell President Barack Obama that the atmosphere was collapsing. REUTERS

Kerry's doc wants him up and walking

Secretary of State John Kerry was said to be in a "good condition" Tuesday after undergoing surgery at Massachusetts General for the leg he broke while cycling in France over the weekend.

His orthopedic surgeon, Dr. Dennis Burke, released a statement saying that Kerry was awake throughout the procedure and that the doctor planned to have his patient up and walking as early as today.

The procedure was uncomplicated, the fracture was fully repaired, and we plan to get him up walking on Wednesday," Burke said in a statement. "I anticipate a short hospitalization."

Kerry, 71, broke his right femur on Sunday while cycling a portion of the Tour de France route in the Haute Savoie region. He spent the night in a Geneva hospital under observation while his return to the United States was planned. METRO

1 Hundreds missing after ship capsizes on China river

Rescuers searched on Tuesday for more than 400 people, many of them elderly Chinese tourists, missing after a cruise boat was hit by a freak tornado and capsized on the Yangtze River in what may become China's worst shipping disaster in nearly 70 years.

Battling bad weather, divers and other rescue workers pulled five people they found trapped in the upturned hull of the four-deck Eastern Star, a small fraction of the 458 people state media said were on board when the ship capsized on Monday night.

Rescue operations appeared extended late into Tuesday night with paramilitary vehicles, dozens of police and soldiers as well as medical and meteorological trucks surrounding the site.

Soldiers set up periodic roadblocks along a muddy path, allowing only official vehicles into the area in the central province of Hubei. REUTERS

2 Detainee alleges CIA sexual abuse, torture beyond Senate findings

The CIA used a wider array of sexual abuse and other forms of torture than was disclosed in a Senate report last year, according to a Guantanamo Bay detainee turned government cooperating witness.

Majid Khan said interrogators poured ice water on his genitals, twice videotaped him naked and repeatedly touched his "private parts" — none of which was described in the Senate report. Interrogators, some of whom smelled of alcohol, also threatened to beat him with a hammer and baseball bats, Khan said. REUTERS

Bill to limit domestic spy programs passes Congress

The U.S. Senate on Tuesday passed a bill reforming a government domestic spying program that swept up millions of Americans' telephone records, sending the bill to the White House for President Barack Obama to sign into law.

Reversing U.S. security policy that had been in place since shortly after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, the bill would end a system exposed by Edward Snowden in 2013. The eavesdropping agency collected and searched records of phone calls looking for terrorism leads but it was not allowed to listen to the content of calls.

Two men pleaded guilty in federal court on Tuesday to conspiring to blow up public buildings and police vehicles during protests in Ferguson, Missouri, last year, prosecutors said.

Olajuwon Davis, 22, and Brandon Baldwin, 24, admitted to the explosive charges and also pleaded guilty to conspiring to buy firearms for felons, who are barred by law from acquiring them, the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Eastern District of Missouri, said in a statement.

Instagram said that it is taking steps to make its ads available to all types of businesses, not just hand-selected brands.

Starting in June, Instagram is rolling out to advertisers the ability to more closely direct campaigns by zip code and other data sets like interests in the same ways that brands can target consumers on its parent company Facebook Inc.

In addition, it will let advertisers link to external websites or app stores with buttons such as "shop now," "sign up," "learn more," and "install now." REUTERS

The surprising money habit couples fight about

Spending habits. For some married couples, how much is OK to spend on hair care can be a touchy subject.

For some women, a hair appointment is just as much about having some "me" time as it is about the cut and color. / ISTOCK

Here's a little marital tip: When financial experts say couples should compromise on absolutely everything, there are times when you just need to split hairs. For instance, try to tell your spouse how much they should spend on getting their hair done. Guaranteed nuclear war.

Hair care, in particular, seems to be an intensely personal subject for couples. Throw money concerns into the mix and it can lead to the financial equivalent of a really bad hair day. Indeed, financial arguments are by far the No. 1 predictor of divorce, according to research by Sonya Britt, a professor at Kansas State University.

There is no doubt the costs of hair care can add up, and quickly. National spending on hair services in 2014 amounted to a record $46 billion, according to estimates by the New Jersey-based consulting firm Kline & Co.

The average salon client drops $67.17 per visit for hair services, according to American Salon's Green Book industry report. That's a repeated cost, of course, with men going to a stylist 11.2 times a year on average, and women dropping in 12.9 times annually.

"As a woman you grow up feeling like expensive hair treatments are mandatory, almost like you're being shamed into it," says Dr. Phoenyx Austin, a fitness expert in Washington and author of "If You Love It, It Will Grow." "You don't want someone telling you you're spending too much money. It's a very touchy subject."

That said, Austin says the final tab can easily get "out of hand" when you are combining pricey appointments with expensive take-home products. She knows of women who spend up to $1,500 a month on their hair.

Costs can disproportionately affect minority communities, where hair care procedures tend to be more elaborate. The average cost of getting extensions or weaves, according to the Green Book, is a whopping $487.25 every time, an increase of $137.29 in a single year.

Samantha McGarry once went into battle on the subject, and the skirmish was brief and decisive.

"At one point, my husband said something about the cost of getting my hair done," says the 47-year-old public relations executive from Framingham, Mass. "So we had a little conversation, and now he knows to focus on other areas."

If times got really tough, McGarry would find room to trim spending and try more do-it-yourself coloring jobs. Truth be told, McGarry doesn't spend crazy amounts on her hair: $120 every now and then on a cut and color. She certainly does not want that budget shorn.

"It's about feeling beautiful, it's about having 'Me Time,' it's about all of that," McGarry says. "Spouses should probably steer clear in order to keep the peace." REUTERS

Iggy Azalea got engaged for her boyfriend's birthday

What's the best way to celebrate your 30th birthday with your famous Australian rapper girlfriend? Proposing marriage, apparently. At least that's what NBA star Nick Young did, asking Iggy Azalea to marry him during his big party, dropping to one knee and producing a sizeable 10-carat yellow diamond ring, according to TMZ. Oh, and the happy occasion was all caught on camera, naturally. Young and Azalea have been dating for two years — after a first date that apparently involved a trip to Target. Who knows, maybe that's where they'll be registered. Also, from the looks of the video, there's a roller coaster at that birthday party. That's dope.

Drake Bell fails at Twitter again

At this point, former Nickelodeon star Drake Bell is getting better known for Twitter dust-ups than … whatever show he was on, I can't remember. Which kind of proves my point. This time, though, he's not getting into online fisticuffs with Justin Bieber fans. Instead, he's displaying a remarkable lack of trans sensitivity in response to Caitlyn Jenner's big reveal — or at least he was until he deleted his offending tweet.

"Sorry … still calling you Bruce," he tweeted this week, immediately causing a firestorm of responses. He then tried to explain himself, though that didn't help much either: "I'm not dissing him! I just don't want to forget his legacy! He is the greatest athlete of all time! Chill out!" There are so many things wrong with that statement, I don't really know where to begin.

Channing Tatum tries, fails, to ugly himself up

Channing Tatum loves a good prank, so when he launched a charity contest that will send a fan to the "Magic Mike XXL" premiere, he thought it would be a great chance to bust out his acting chops. Tatum dons old-age makeup, glasses and a pretty terrible goatee to pose as a marketing exec quizzing fans at an advanced screening about what they think of the franchise and Tatum himself. He couldn't keep the ruse up for long, though, especially when his character decided to give an audience member a lap dance.

A.D. AMOROSI

A.D. Amorosi is a journalist covering arts, entertainment and food news and gossip. He can be reached at divaland@aol.com.

Philly's hometown heroes The Roots owned the weekend. Along with Tariq "Black Thought" Trotter doing his GrassROOTS Roots Rock Run 5K at Lingelbach Elementary school and Questlove spinning Lee Jones' Sundae party at University City's Tap House, there was the Roots Picnic at Festival Pier. The Saturday show was killer, with performances from Questlove's sister Donn T, Arcade Fire's Win Butler (as DJ Windows 98), A$AP Rocky, The Weeknd and Erykah Badu, who welcomed surprise guests The Lox to her set with The Roots.

Backstage, there was Mayor Michael Nutter, Will Smith's pal Charlie Mack and Philadelphia Music Alliance Vice Chairwoman Mia Tinari, who showed up with a plaque for The Roots' induction onto Philly's Walk of Fame on Oct. 26.

The new Fillmore in Fishtown just set its opening date: Philly's own Hall & Oates play Oct. 1. Tickets go on sale for October and November concerts on Thursday.

There aren't many shops left in The Gallery on Market Street. Tiffany's Bakery is going out everyone's favorite way: free food. They'll be giving away free cupcakes to the first 1,000 customers Friday before moving to the main entrance at Jefferson Station on Eighth Street.

"Iron Chef" Jose Garces closed his second eatery at Seventh and Chestnut, Rosa Blanca, but said he'll try again, this time with a cafe. "Top Chef" Kevin Sbraga closed Juniper Commons at Broad and South after six months.

Celebrity sightings

- Composer Stephen Sondheim received the inaugural Master Storyteller Award at the Arden Theatre on Monday. The snag? Power went out along North Second Street, forcing the stripped-down event — just singers and a piano — to move to Arden's workshop space.
- Kate Gosselin of "Kate Plus 8" signed autographs at the TLC Block Party at Penn's Landing on Saturday, accompanied by her bodyguard (and once-rumored beau) Steve Neild and wearing a shiny new ring that TMZ claims could signify engagement to her millionaire boyfriend, Jeff Prescott.

Lil Durk: Looking forward while looking back

Lil Durk performs at Voltage Lounge tonight and tomorrow. / PROVIDED

Interview. The 22-year-old rapper picks himself back up after the recent death of his manager with the release of his debut album, "Remember My Name."

Right now, Lil Durk is straddling two worlds. The first is the world he grew up in, namely Chicago's Englewood neighborhood, well known for gun violence as well as birthing heavy hitters in the rap game, including Durk's mentor, Chief Keef.

The other world is the one Def Jam is handing to him on a silver platter after signing him in 2012. It's a world of watching Chicago Bulls games from a luxury box, playing big venues and never having to take out his wallet when ordering a drink.

Surviving the struggle

After releasing six mix tapes, Durk's debut album, "Remember My Name," is now out. "I want everyone to understand the struggle and feel where I'm coming from. I want them to feel the music, track for track," he tells us.

Blood, sweat and bullets

In the year leading up to the album's release, Durk's cousin was shot and killed, not the first person he's lost to gun violence. Two months ago, his 24-year-old manager Uchenna Agina, known as Chino, was murdered after leaving an anti-violence event.

"You know how some people have diaries? The studio is my diary," Durk tells us. My music is going to tell you how I feel."

Living the hip-hop fairy tale

Durk is open about his struggles, but he also owns up to his mistakes, namely getting arrested (twice) for gun possession.

Right now, Durk is living the hip-hop fairy tale. A Twitter exchange with Logic magically led to his single "Tryna' Tryna.'" He and Jeremih cut several tracks together including "Like Me." This is his time. "I know what I gotta do to make this new world work," Durk says. "I know I gotta work hard for a while to get to where I want to get to. … But I can balance both worlds."

'Entourage' is Hollywood glamour on crack

Interview. How playing Sloan prepped Emmanuelle Chriqui for the film industry's boys club.

It's not easy being a woman in the hypermale "Entourage" world, but somehow Emmanuelle Chriqui's Sloan has managed to come out not too terribly objectified. And, she insists, the training has been invaluable for when real-life moviemaking gets out of hand.

The "Entourage" world can be pretty testosterone-heavy. How do you approach Sloan's perspective within that?

You know, you just have to approach whatever given situation with complete authenticity, which is all I can do as far as Sloan is concerned. There might be things that morally I don't agree with or that Emmanuelle would never forgive, but we're acting, we're making a television show or a movie. And even in these situations where you go, "Oh my God, I can't believe it," Doug [Ellin] and the writers always wrote my character with a lot of integrity. So I kind of just never overthought it.

She always did get better treatment, character-wise, than most female characters in the series.

A hundred percent, and I'll be the first to admit it. I feel like Doug was particularly protective about my character. He wanted her to stand apart from the other women that came and went. Having said that, the other women characters — like Perrey Reeves' character, Mrs. Ari, or Constance Zimmer's character — they're all strong women. They're all superstrong women in a man's world, and that's one perspective of this town that's real.

I did find the extras a little distracting, though, since all of the women in the background of every scene are basically models.

I know, right? It's like, I don't know where to look. They're all gorgeous. With "Entourage," people were always like, "Is it real?" And I'm like, "Listen, it's real and then it's exaggerated for your entertainment potential." That's it. It's entertainment. It's, like, the glitz and the glamour but on crack. That's what the show — and the movie — feel like.

Does working on this series skew your own view of the entertainment industry?
Not really. I would say the only way that I feel it sort of bled into my life was if I'm on other sets or in other situations and it's a heavily male-dominated set or what have you, I feel like I've had the best training of all. I'm like, "Don't worry about me, I come from all the boys. I'm good."

I feel like I've had a really good training ground to be strong, be in my body, not be intimidated by a heavy male dominance, and I'm supergrateful for that because a lot — not all, but a lot — of this business is made up of that.

Emmanuelle Chriqui stars in "Entourage." / WARNER BROS.

Have you seen anything specific on sets that have felt right out of the show?
Oh my God. I've always said that what they should've done is a documentary of the making of this movie — of the negotiations, of how it took three and a half years to get there. That in itself was an episode of "Entourage," or maybe a complete season of "Entourage." Honestly, it was.

According to Zola, couples have changed the way they shop for their home.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

Picking out products for your registry is one of the most fun parts of wedding planning. And these days you can do it all from the comfort of your couch. But when you have the whole World Wide Web at your fingertips, narrowing your list down can be rather daunting. So we checked in with Campbell Walmsley, Divisional Merchandise Manager at hip new wedding registry Zola — where couples can add items or "experiences" from any store online, sign up for a honeymoon fund and manage their shipments — to find out what items are the most popular this wedding season. And p.s.: You don't have to be engaged to get cute stuff for your home.

Home trends

"There's a swing back towards this concept of making a happy home," says Walmsley. And it's not just the women. "We're seeing grooms really get involved."

Chalk it up to our fast-paced, Web-ruled lives, but Walmsley and her team have noticed that more and more people want to do things the old way.

"We see so many people buying things for baking," she says. "The woman can be a CEO, but she wants to bake. It's a cool combination of modern-meets-nostalgic."

Another big theme Walmsley sees is a focus on entertaining.

"People are getting more sets of plates," she says. And it's not about fine china. "They're buying one really beautiful set which they dress up with metallic accents."

With entertaining comes cocktails. "There's a huge emphasis for bespoke barware and tools."

Franklin Court rising in unlikely location

The new development brings high-end housing to Seventh and Fairmount.

Even more new projects

Franklin Court isn't the only dog in this race. We're noticing projects popping up all over the area, including a huge proposal on the books for row houses, residential towers and a supermarket for the 1300 block of Fairmount.

In addition, the Reading Viaduct will run along Ninth Street, and is already bringing more growth to the neighborhood.

Lately it feels like there's construction on every block in Philadelphia, so we rarely bat an eye at the thought of new homes being erected. But when we learned about a small cluster of luxe town houses going up at Seventh and Fairmount, we took notice. That area, west of Northern Liberties, is off the beaten path enough to make it teeter back and forth between both sides of "in transition." The recent addition of a Federal Donuts — also on Seventh and Fairmount — might be a sign of businesses and residents to come.

Construction recently began on Franklin Court Townhomes, which will include new three-bedroom homes, with 17 town houses and three multifamily triplex units. They're starting at around half a million and while completion is projected for summer of 2016, listing agent and co-owner Guillermo Salas tells us that seven have already been sold.

"We wanted to create something unique that could be a part of the community," says Salas. "We took a lot of care in the design of the project and paid attention to the external facade and the curbside appeal." Let's not forget about the roof decks, contemporary layouts and parking for all.

Salas sees potential, and he's not alone. "I think it's good to have development happening," says Matt Ruben, president of the Northern Liberties Neighbors Association. "There are a lot of people who live immediately west of Northern Liberties, and Sixth Street has been a significant barrier."

"There's a lot of vacant and unused land over there," adds Ruben. "I hope that people can create a diverse and thriving community."

Horoscope

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20
Finish what you start. Doing too much for others will stifle your progress. Set realistic goals and adhere to them.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22
It's important to stay motivated. Once you have dedicated your time and effort to a specific path, keep the momentum flowing.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22
Call in favors and form partnerships. A creative idea that may seem too daunting to do on your own will come to fruition with additional support.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Highlight your best qualities in order to make an impression. Increased knowledge coupled with a confident attitude will attract allies.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22
An organized approach will help you complete your busy schedule. Don't flit back and forth. Concentrate on one venture at a time in order to succeed.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Protect your health and assets. Documents should be given a thorough going-over to make sure that you are prepared.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Love is on the rise. You may be thrown off course by an enticing offer, but wait until you get a clear view of things.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20
A pending deal will be riddled with unanswered questions. Consider trends so that you can make an informed decision.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18
Your involvement with a charitable or benevolent organization will bring you satisfaction and a sense of purpose. In addition, you will improve your image.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20
Don't delve too deeply into the private lives of your peers. Your desire to learn personal details will be misinterpreted as meddling.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20
Now is the perfect time for romance. Do your best to improve a relationship, and devote extra attention to stabilizing your love life.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21
Your perspective will be enhanced by traveling. Embracing different cultures will make it easier to appeal to a wider variety of people.

Business benefits from the qualities of female employees

Re: 'Why more women need to study science and engineering' (Metro, June 1) I read with high interest Meera Kaul's take on STEM fields and why more women are needed. As a professional engineer and a father of two daughters who have entered the business world, I am even more acutely aware of male dominance in engineering and business in general. But beyond Kaul's push for having women use STEM fields to ensure their career stability, I offer a completely different set of criteria. My experience in hiring and empowering female staff has been terrific because, as compared with men, women seem to be more involved in their work and self-investment to learn "beyond 5 p.m.," are competitive but not hypercompetitive as men mostly are, and are more willing to function in a sharing and engaging manner than their male counterparts. A bit Utopian? Sure, but I would hope even Type A males can take a lesson.

Trade rumors just part of

MLB. How do Phillies players deal with the rumor mill in the age of social media?

Ryan Howard and a slew of others could find themselves playing for playoff contenders after the deadline in August. / GETTY IMAGES

If it happens, it happens.

That's the ballplayer's unofficial motto when it comes to the subject of trade rumors.

They're out of your control, so don't let them get in your head. Just go out and do your job, which is something you can control. The rest is just part of the business.

Not game. Business.

"It's a company and they're doing what they feel is best, which right now is to deal for the future," said Ben Revere, who's rumored to be one of many Phillies on the block, despite being only 27 years old. "If they can get prospects they're gonna do it. But I don't really think about it. I understand the situation. If it happens, it happens.

job for lowly Phillies

When I was in Minnesota it was always crazy. Every phone call you get from an area code you don't recognize or from your agent, you're thinking this might be the time."

Will that next phone call finally be the one that sends Cole Hamels, Jonathan Papelbon, Ryan Howard, Aaron Harang and/or someone else packing? With the Phils in free fall the speculation is mounting that now is when Ruben Amaro should pull the trigger on as many deals as possible.

Of course, it's just not that simple. But that won't keep the rumor mill from grinding overtime over the next few months.

"That's why it's called a trade rumor," said 33-year-old veteran Jerome Williams, who was sent from the Giants to the White Sox in May. 2005. "When I was younger I kind of worried about it. Now I'm not worried until it happens. You understand the business side of it, so you don't pay attention to it. If it happens, it happens. If it doesn't, it doesn't."

Quoted

"It can be tough but at the same time once you've had it done or had a teammate traded you just go about your business. There's a lot of stuff in this game you can't control. That's one of the major things." Jeff Francoeur

Still, a month or so from now when the trade deadline is looming the uncertainty can't help but have an effect. In 2010 Jeff Francoeur, then with the Mets, heard the rumors and even had discussions with GM Omar Minaya and manager Jerry Manuel.

"They said, 'There's a possibility, so just continue to play hard and you never know what's gonna happen,'" recalled Francoeur, who wound up in the World Series after being traded to Texas. "All through the game you wonder if you're gonna called into the office."

And for the most part, you didn't have to deal with social media like Twitter and Facebook back then. Certainly none of that existed in 1982 when Phils' manager Ryne Sandberg learned he'd be dealt to the Cubs, where he'd go on to have a Hall of Fame career.

"It was much more quiet back in the day," said Sandberg, who was in Venezuela when he found out about being dealt with Larry Bowa for Ivan DeJesus. A trade would happen and nobody had an inkling that anything was happening. "Now there's much more coverage. The talks and conversation get out more than when I was playing."

Unless you're like Aaron Harang and truly not paying attention.

"With Twitter and all that Internet stuff I get more calls and texts from buddies and family saying 'What's the deal?'" said 37-year-old Harang, once the proverbial hot prospect in a 2003 trade deadline deal that sent him from the A's to the Reds. "I say, 'I don't know. You'll probably find out before I do because I'm not on Twitter or Facebook.' I don't waste my time on them."

Though for everyone else awaiting their fate, this can't help but be an anxious time.

"With Cole, Howie, Pap and those guys, you know there's gonna be possibilities," said the 31-year-old Francoeur. "But guys know how to handle it and go about their business."

Until it finally happens — and one of those many rumors becomes a reality.

Under sized

Phillies part with Sizemore

The Phillies had already given indications that they were ready to move on from veteran outfielder and former All-Star Grady Sizemore when they designated him for assignment to make room for Cody Asche.

But the team officially cut ties this week when they cut the 32-year-old who signed a one-year, $2 million deal an offseason ago.

"With Sizemore, it was just a numbers thing, opening up a chance for a younger player like Cody to be in there everyday," manager Ryne Sandberg said last week. "I think 'Size' was really on the rise the last three weeks with some playing time, so he really got his bat going pretty good and was a pinch-hitter that had some pinch-hits off the bench. Just one of those things as far as numbers. It had nothing to do with performance." METRO

Maxwell, other Eagles stand by bold remark

NFL. Byron Maxwell and Malcolm Jenkins say the 2015 Eagles have the right stuff to compete for title.

Is it his Seattle swagger seeping through? Or is it an undeniable instinct to share that the Eagles are really better than many pundits say?

It doesn't matter what you think — Byron Maxwell is sticking to his guns. The Eagles' confidence is sky high and Maxwell wants Eagles fans — and the rest of the NFL — to know it.

"Everybody has that," the Eagles No. 1 cornerback said after OTAs Tuesday. "I don't think it's just one person believing that — I think everybody is believing that. It's our year, we truly believe that in the locker room. You can say that as a guarantee but I believe it; it's confidence."

Last week, Maxwell told reporters about winning the Super Bowl next season that "You can take that as a guarantee. That's just me believing in my team and the product we're going to put out there on the field. I really do believe that."

The 2014 Super Bowl champion with the Seahawks wasn't under the same scrutiny in the small Seattle market. But he knew the risks before he made his bold statement.

"They warned me, the Philadelphia media and what comes along with it," Maxwell joked. "I was a little surprised but I kind of expected it."

Is it all confidence or is it some residual swagger left behind from playing with the best defense in football, the Legion of Doom, for so long?

"I think that's just in me," he said. "Maybe it is a little bit of Seattle, Pete Carroll may have brainwashed me."

Quoted

"It really wasn't a prediction, it was more like confidence in my teammates, in what we can do and what we should do. I think every team has that goal when they start the season." Maxwell

Another member of the Birds' secondary, the on-field and locker room leader Malcolm Jenkins, knows what it takes to win a Super Bowl, too. He did it back in 2009 with the Saints and sees this year's Eagles squad up to the task. They have the high confidence that success in the NFL demands.

"I think the guys who are here know what it takes," Jenkins said, "and have seen where we have fallen short and know what to improve, and that confidence level, having the ability and the talent. I think all the guys we have accumulated are winners and have either won a Super Bowl or know what it takes to be a great player at their position. That spreads to all the guys who are trying to learn."

It starts with Chip Kelly and echoes through the roster. Winning with hard work, the right attitude and character is perhaps an easier path than one that relies on raw talent. It was reflected by the Eagles' offseason moves and is also reflected on the practice field.

"The more guys you get with that confidence, the better your team is," Jenkins said. "I think everybody fully believes in the players we have and the process we have. Right now all you can do is trust the plan and if that plan isn't to get to the Super Bowl we need a new plan."

NFL. Eagles hope to find their starting strong safety by swapping a cornerback to the spot

It's been six years since Weapon X left Philadelphia. The team hasn't had a true safety since.

But Malcolm Jenkins hopes to change that in the minds of Eagles fans, coming off an impressive first year in 2014 as the Birds' free safety. He's a playmaker — exactly what the Eagles need to replace Brian Dawkins in their hearts and minds.

In his second year, Jenkins has found himself as a leader and mentor for teammates like Jaylen Watkins and Walter Thurmond, who are going through the cornerback-safety transition, just like the change he endured in the beginning of his career.

"I needed to get on the field," Jenkins said. "There was an opening, I embraced it to get on the field. "

Quoted

"I think Chip is tapping into his scheme, were all interchangeable." Jenkins

One of the biggest story lines on the team is that of who will start at strong safety opposite Jenkins.

Chip Kelly and Bill Davis have indicated that a cornerback could learn and take over the role.

"It's easier to go from corner to safety," Jenkins said. "Skills translate over. The biggest thing from a safety standpoint is your eyes, knowing the defense and getting guys lined up."

Kelly welcomes a competition at the free safety spot. Injury-prone Earl Wolff is entering his third year. Chris Maragos practiced with the No. 1 last week; however he was brought in last year to be an impactful special-teamer. The Eagles took cornerback Eric Rowe in the second round of the draft out of Utah, where he spent three years playing safety. Kelly, however, stated that Rowe would remain at corner. The attention now has turned to Watkins and Thurmond.

Watkins is entering his second year in the league, after he was drafted for his positional versatility. However, last year Watkins didn't practice at safety until injuries to Nate Allen and Wolff forced a change, which sent Watkins back to corner.

When Jenkins was asked on what he's seen in Watkins thus far he told reporters at OTAs Tuesday, "It's going good, he's seeing the whole field and reading the quarterback. He's going through that but he's still cross-training at both positions."

Thurmond was brought over from New York to be a corner, but a draft that saw three corners taken moved him to safety. Thurmond has the skill set, but has not played a game at the position.

Jenkins is the model of why the swap can work.

"You need a safety that can cover the slot. We don't need a big hitter in this defense, we need guys that can move around, blitz and cover. I think he is really building up that position to have longevity on the team." JEFF SMYTH

Curry shoots for LeBron's throne as NBA's greatest when Finals tip

NBA Finals. The Cavs and Warriors are both looking to end title droughts on the backs of their stars.

The Golden State Warriors and Cleveland Cavaliers meet in this year's NBA Finals. It's been 40 years since the Warriors raised a championship banner. Meanwhile, the Cavaliers are still seeking their first title. It's also the first time since the NBA's inaugural season that two rookie coaches, Warriors Steve Kerr and Cavaliers David Blatt, have taken their teams to the NBA Finals.

But which coach, and team, will come out on top? Here are three things to watch for as the series gets underway Thursday (9 p.m., ABC):

LeBron James will be sure to see plenty of Andre Iguodala during the NBA Finals. / GETTY IMAGES

Stopping LeBron

The Cavs are back in the Finals because of one man: LeBron James. If you can get past all the complaining to referees and all the "look-at-me" moments, you see a once-in-a-generation player. James chose to return to Cleveland because he wanted to bring a championship back home, and once again he's on the brink of doing that. But with Kyrie Irving (knee) not fully healthy, it could all fall on James to finish the job. This Warriors team has no shortage of options in defending him. Whether it's Harrison Barnes, Andre Iguodala, or Draymond Green, the Warriors are going to throw everything but the kitchen sink at him in hopes of limiting his production. If you're Golden State, you make James beat you with his jumper. The last thing they want is him driving to the basket and putting them in foul trouble.

The Splash Brothers

It was a scary scene when Klay Thompson began to bleed out of his ear after taking an inadvertent knee to the head last series. Thompson was diagnosed with a concussion last week, but told reporters he expects to be cleared and ready to go for Game 1. Thompson and Steph Curry make up the most dangerous backcourt in the NBA and can shoot their way back into a game in a moment's notice. Curry (73-for-167, 43.7 percent) and Thompson (45-for-106) have hit the most 3-pointers this postseason (as well as the regular season) and that's one part of their game that no opposing team is going to be able to eliminate. There's a good chance James covers Curry at some point, but the Warriors are so good at getting him open that James is going to be doing a lot of chasing.

Homecourt advantage

The Warriors have only lost three games at home all season, one of which came in the playoffs against the Grizzlies. They've got homecourt advantage in the NBA Finals, and they're playing in front of a wild fanbase that's hasn't had a reason to be wilder in a long time. So yes, it's going to be loud. But the Cavaliers have won six games on the road in the postseason, including their last four. They're obviously going to need to win at least one at Golden State, but it will prove to be their toughest test yet.
